

DOMINIQUE LOVE
CEO & FOUNDER

Since creating Corporate Community Outsourcing (CCO) in 2003, Dominique Love and her team have helped dozens of Fortune 500 companies, including American Express Publishing, The Coca-Cola Company, Delta Air Lines, The Home Depot, Newell Rubbermaid, sanofi-aventis, Turner Broadcasting System, and WellPoint, build strategic community investment programs. The team's efforts have resulted in more than 400 volunteer projects, close to 200 corporate executives engaged on nonprofit boards, a dozen Dollars for Doers and Matching Gifts programs for more than 68,000 employees, 10 cause-marketing campaigns and more than $50 million in cash contributions across five continents.

On the nonprofit front, Love and team have worked with notable nonprofit organizations, including Atlanta-Fulton Public Library Foundation, Grady Health System, Jewish Family & Career Services, Southeastern Council on Foundations, Quality Care for Children and United Way, to help them achieve fundraising success and stronger, more engaged board members. Her efforts have helped generate more than $70 million for nonprofit organizations.

Love's career began in development at her alma mater, Auburn University, where she later served on the Advisory Council for the College of Liberal Arts and the Women's Leadership Institute Board. From Auburn, Love worked as the Director of Development for a youth service organization and then as a campaign manager for Coxe Curry & Associates. In 1998, Love was hired by The Coca-Cola Company to lead its corporate contributions and employee engagement activities.

An energetic entrepreneur, in 2010 Love turned her passion for Southern food, beverage and culture into a business with the creation of the Atlanta Food & Wine Festival. The Festival debuted in 2011 as the first culinary weekend in the nation dedicated exclusively to showcasing Southern food and beverage traditions. The second Festival took place in May 2012 to rave reviews, including award-winning food writer Josh Ozersky, TIME and RachelRay.com calling the Festival the "only indispensable food event in the country."

In 2011, Love was named one of the top 40 Under 40 rising leaders in Atlanta by the Atlanta Business Chronicle. Over the years, she has also been recognized as a YWCA Women of Achievement for The Coca-Cola Company and Who's Who of American Colleges and Universities.
